Multimedia Rising Star Award

Selected every two years at ICME conferences, the Multimedia Rising Star Award aims to acknowledge young and accomplished researchers working in emerging areas of multimedia research. The Award was created to highlight the vision and research achievements of plenary presentations, while dialoguing with senior members about the future of multimedia research.

Getting Nominated for ICME 2023

Nominations of Rising Star candidates are made by the four sponsoring TCs. Each TC can nominate no more than three candidates from the TC members. The candidates are expected to have graduated with their PhD within the past 10 years. We encourage TCs to consider diversity, including regional and gender balance when selecting the candidates. Based on the inputs from TCs, a committee including the ICME 2023 OC members will select the final Rising Stars. In this process, multiple factors will be carefully considered, including created and expected impact (both academic and non-academic) of their work, scholastic and industrial achievements after their PhD degree, professional service records, and proposed presentation topics of nominated candidates. Other relevant achievements should also be highlighted in the nomination documentation for the candidates.
